INTRODUCTION.

EVERY person should learn to write by this short method, because few things can be acquired with such little expenditure of time that will answer such important ends in daily life; for only a few days will be required to become sufficiently acquainted with it to enable one to make notes. In a month, giving an hour each day, one may anticipate a saving of time in ordinary composition. By careful attention for three months, following some reader or lecturer every day, to write a hundred words in a minute, and so on, until as fast as one can speak, which is almost six times faster than is possible to a swift long-hand writer. This system being based upon the Phonetic principle of writing signs as representatives of sounds, the first requirement is to realize the sounds, and then to set down signs which shall again suggest the same sounds. If the signs are correctly written there will be no difficulty in reading after any length of time. The consonant signs being attached to the letters of the alphabet, which may be considered as heard in words to be represented, may be learnt with very little trouble. The vowel-sounds a, æ, e, au, o, oo, i, oi, ou, and u are represented in the simplest manner possible, and those vowels not represented may be understood to be very weak, and so not represented. The consonants are either thick or thin at pleasure, the length and direction determining their value. The great value of the system is to be tested by the simplicity of the consonant signs. Were these not so simple many more contractions would be necessary, and these are seldom of value in reading. The exact position is not relied on for the meaning; this must be determined by the vowels when necessary. More care in this respect must be taken, when other than the writer is to be the reader. Except when reporting a rapid speaker make few contractions, and then only such as shall be clear from the context. For composition which you wish to read freely, do not let the meaning of any word rest upon the part of the sentence occurring after it. Reporting valuable speeches the object is to write as fast as you possibly can, and so long as it can be read and transcribed for the press immediately after, in which time one could scarcely forget any word which he had written, is all that is required, as within a few hours he may have the thing in printed form for a penny; but for writing speeches or sermons, which one wants to read fluently, write correctly, and make no contractions which shall depend upon anything coming after them. There are many systems which have failed for reporting purposes, because the signs have been anything but simple, and utterly failed for composition intended for public reading, by the immenso succession of difficulties which present themselves in the positions, thicknesses, and purposes. One should contract according to his own ability to remember, for it does not follow that what is of great value to one will be to another. All these characters can be made with a pencil equally as with a pen. Whereas it is not possible with a thick point to the pencil to make a fine stroke, nor with a fine point to make a thick stroke. The punctuation is the same as in long-hand. The preference has been given to those characters which are horizontal or more easily formed, according as they occur more frequently, and this has been partly determined by the best arranged "cases" used by the printers of the present day, which will be seen to result in an easy hand, and such as will admit of phraseography to any reasonable extent. The very power of writing depends upon the readiness with which the signs arise in the mind on the catching of the sound, and the practice of the hand.

Mr. Pitman's system is the most complete ever published. Having written it ten years, I can yet commend my own to all, even those who have failed to acquire his, in the hope of rendering service to clergymen, ministers, authors, public men and corresponding clerks, as the characters and vowel arrangements are simpler, fewer and not less adequate than any other. I shall always be glad to receive suggestions.

First read all that is possible. I shall constantly prepare readings in it as fast as I find demand. St. John's Gospel will be ready in a few weeks.

Orders should be sent early to the Author, addressed to Croydon, or to the Publisher. Standing orders may also be sent for whatever may appear from time to time (to the Author only), and either the amount or the thing itself to be returned immediately.

PRINCIPAL CHARACTERS.

CONSONANTS.

'G' sound is always hard as in gat, gate, geer, never for 'j' sound of g soft, as in giant, nor for 'ng' nor 'gn'; only use 'h' as heard, and it may not be necessary to write it in the middle of a word unless for a vowel's position; 'k' as in Kate, cat, there is no 'c' soft, as in city, this being shown by 's'; 'q' is always followed by 'u' and with it sounded 'kw' Our Queen quietly questioned the quorum acquiring the choir: 'y' as in yacht, yew, yea; 'ch' as in church, chapel;

problem.*

'th' at the beginning of a word is somewhat heavier than when preceded by a vowel, as is the case with some other signs, so that two cannot be required and certainly can be more serviceably used: 'sh' in shall, ash, wish; 'zh' as in azure, leisure, treasure, measure, pleasure; the last sign represents 'ng' there will be no difficulty in remembering this if you observe two little boys in the swinging boat singing 'swinging swang, and then's in this sentence. Write at first with care and precision or you will suffer disappointment.

The dot indicates the letter way, but both are admissible. The list of combinations should be studied with the above table. For reporting write which ever can be written quicker, but when waiting for general reading use only those that are dotted, except to save despatching time, for, or when it is necessary to insert vowels, which can be better inserted when this is so.

VOWELS:

In representing vowel sounds, make an effort to place the signs in their proper positions, although with practice in a very short time you will not require many. I have supplied nine, $\check{a}$ $\bar{a}$ $\bar{e}$ $\check{a}w$ $\bar{o}$ $\bar{o}o$, $\bar{i}$ $\bar{o}i$ $\bar{o}w$. The vowel sounds less audible than these as $\check{e}$ in check, $\check{e}$ in lend $\bar{i}$ in kitten may always be supposed as coming between the consonants when no vowel sound is indicated. To show $\check{a}$ as in add, place the dot before the consonant in the position at the sign α , but quite close to the stroke; $\check{a}$ as in bat, sounded after the consonant must be represented by a close dot at the opposite side marked δ ; another short $\check{a}$ sound as in fall and author, is represented by a dot at a longer distance from the stroke at position α sounded first, at δ sounded next; $\bar{a}$ as in ate and cake, shown by a close dot at β when read first and at ϵ when read next; $\bar{o}$ as in pole and coal, shown by a more distant dot at β sounded first and at ϵ sounded next; $\bar{e}$ as in eve and griev $\bar{e}$ by a close dot at γ read first, and at ζ next; $\bar{o}o$ as in p $\bar{o}o$ l sch $\bar{o}o$ l by a distant dot at γ , read first and at ζ next; The other three are represented by a little dash placed at right angles to the stroke, but must not touch it, as - at α means that the word begins with the pure $\bar{i}$ as in isle, or that the pronoun I precedes the word and when I is followed by a word commencing with the pure i as I eyed him, two little dashes close to each other will indicate the occurrence of two i's, thus d with two dashes at α , will equal i id, for the simple i equals eye sound; and any word beginning with ä or äü sound preceded by I as in I ädmit, I äuthorize, a close dot in the first instance and a distant one for the second; in the occurrence of a vowel sound at β as in I äim or I öwn, the dash must occur at α and be read first, the close dot at β above m will then read äm, thus the two words, I aim, are written; and a distant dot at β above n with a dash at α will read I öñ, thus I own, is written; ē sound at γ preceded by I as in I ēät, reads I ēt, the dash before t at α with the close dot at γ represent I eat; then two more occur namely öi and öw, the öi, as in öil and böy, the öi is shown by a dash at β when the sound is before the consonant as in öil, and by a dash at ϵ when after the consonant as in böil; öw as in öüt by a dash at γ and after the stroke at ζ as in cöw. The above is a long array but it is only to check the beginner in making mistakes from the very outset that the same thing has been restated again and again. When two strokes form an angle as between b and n in bound, the dash at ζ or α may be confounded, therefore place it at γ above n.

$\alpha = a$, $\beta = b$, $\gamma = c$, $\delta = d$, $\epsilon = e$, $\zeta = z$: These signs only serve to mark the vowel positions, they are not part of the system.

Each vowel has two places with each consonant.

POSITIVES.

Those that are old enough and wish to report easily will find considerable facility in using i. ii. iv. and v. of Positives

i. shows how to write, first d after any stroke. especially after d or t, second t after any stroke. [mind only at the latter part]

ii. first 'com' or o o k s, second 'con.' [only at the beginning of a stroke although to any word of any word]

iii. first, written up. 'st,' 'down' nt,' written through any stroke, up it means 'less,' down it means 'scess.'

iv. means 'mnt.'

v. a little dash through from a to d means, 'and the,' 3 to e, 'and of the,' 7 to z, 'and to the.' [read first]

vi. at a or d means, 'and this,' at 3 or e, 'and these,' at 7 or z, 'and those,' read before or after as written.

vii. only before the first or after the last stroke, a xiii. alone or as x means thr, so that fv father, mv mother, brv brother, nv neither, v either, their, there, other.

xiv. in a similar way means self, as ha himself, ma myself, hra her self, nash unself his

On pages 9 and 10, phrases are given in which the above are used, but they need not trouble one who has little time to study, or little need to attend to what will more particularly interest one aiming to report. These I have called positives, because they always mean the same in writing which they do here. The little columns of words put in to fill up what would be otherwise spaces, may prove suggestive.

A Compendium of Evangelical Theology

GIVEN IN THE WORDS OF HOLY SCRIPTURE.

BY THE REV. WILLIAM PASSMORE.

London: Longmans, Green & Co. 12s. 6d.

New York: Amon D. Randolph. Three-and-half dollars.

The "OUTLINES OF THEOLOGY," upon which this Compendium is based, and to which it is adapted to serve as a Companion, is by ARCHIBALD ALEXANDER HODGE, D.D., son of the celebrated Dr. HODGE, and Professor of Didactic and Pastoral Theology in the Western Theological Seminary, Alleghany.

To state that Dr. HODGE's "OUTLINES" is used as a Text-book in several Theological Colleges in England, will be sufficient to commend the character of the work; and the following list of chapters will indicate its scope, embracing, as it does, the principal subjects in Theology;—

- I. BEING OF GOD.
- II. THEOLOGY: ITS SOURCES.
- III. EVIDENCES OF CHRISTIANITY.
- IV. INSPIRATION.
- V. THE SCRIPTURES OF THE OLD AND NEW TESTAMENTS: THE ONLY RULE OF FAITH, AND JUDGE OF CONTROVERSIES.
- VI. THE CANON OF SCRIPTURE.
- VII. THE ATTRIBUTES OF GOD.
- VIII. THE DOCTRINE OF THE TRINITY, INCLUDING THE DIVINITY OF CHRIST, THE ETERNAL GENERATION OF THE SON, THE PERSONALITY, DIVINITY, AND ETERNAL PROCESSION OF THE HOLY GHOST, AND THE SEVERAL PROPERTIES AND MUTUAL RELATIONS OF THE PERSONS OF THE GODHEAD.
- IX. THE DOCTRINE OF THE DIVINE DECREES IN GENERAL.
- X. PREDESTINATION.
- XI. THE CREATION OF THE WORLD.
- XII. THE DOCTRINE OF ANGELS.
- XIII. PROVIDENCE.
- XIV. THE ORIGINAL STATE OF MAN.
- XV. THE COVENANT OF WORKS.
- XVI. SIN: ITS NATURE; ADAM'S SIN, AND THE CONSEQUENCES THEREOF TO HIS POSTERITY.
- XVII. ORIGINAL SIN.
- XVIII. THE DOCTRINE OF FREE AGENCY, AND OF HUMAN INABILITY.

- XIX. THE COVENANT OF GRACE.
- XX. THE PERSON OF CHRIST.
- XXI. THE MEDIATORIAL OFFICE OF CHRIST.
- XXII. THE ATONEMENT: ITS NATURE, NECESSITY, PERFECTION, AND EXTENT.
- XXIII. THE INTERCESSION OF CHRIST.
- XXIV. THE MEDIATORIAL KINGSHIP OF CHRIST.
- XXV. EFFECTUAL CALLING.
- XXVI. REGENERATION.
- XXVII. FAITH.
- XXVIII. THE UNION OF BELIEVERS WITH CHRIST.
- XXIX. REPENTANCE.
- XXX. JUSTIFICATION.
- XXXI. ADOPTION.
- XXXII. SANCTIFICATION.
- XXXIII. PERSEVERANCE OF THE SAINTS.
- XXXIV. DEATH, AND THE STATE OF THE SOUL AFTER DEATH.
- XXXV. THE RESURRECTION.
- XXXVI. THE SECOND ADVENT AND GENERAL JUDGMENT.
- XXXVII. HEAVEN, AND THE DOCTRINE OF ETERNAL PUNISHMENTS.
- XXXVIII. THE SACRAMENTS.
- XXXIX. BAPTISM: ITS NATURE AND DESIGN, MODE, SUBJECTS, EFFICACY, AND NECESSITY.
- XL. THE LORD'S SUPPER.

The chapters contain in some cases fifty or sixty questions. The more vital questions are unquestionably those which have received Scripture proof or refutation; but which, from want of time or patience to turn up the numerous passages, are often imperfectly studied or altogether neglected. Possibly, no System of Theology contains more reference to Scripture in proof of its assertions and statements, or makes references with more positive accuracy and conclusiveness than Dr. HODGE's "OUTLINES;"

refers, arranged under distinct heads such as you propose. The book will be a digest of Christian Theology in Scripture language. I trust you may have great success in your undertaking, and only wish I could do more to advance it. . . . With Christian regards and every good wish, yours very sincerely,
J. W. WARDLAW."

The Rev. J. H. WILSON, Secretary to the Home Missionary Society, writes,

"H.M.S., LONDON, January 18th, 1871.

MY DEAR SIR,—I have examined your scheme of Scripture Exposition, and think it will be a blessing to our Churches of every denomination. 'What saith the Scriptures?' must now more than ever be put and answered; but how to answer such a question has hitherto been a great difficulty. I have seen nothing more simple, practical, and satisfactory than the proofs you have sent. It is an admirable compendium. I shall be glad to subscribe for it, and recommend the work wherever I may have any influence. . . .

Rev. W. PASSMORE.

Cordially yours H. WILSON."
